Dear Friends,

St. Pius X High School has the privilege to educate and to form teenagers who go out from here to impact the world. Within our own halls we rally around those in need in our community, most recently in concert with the Wounded Warriors Career Development Program at Sandia National Laboratory. Over the first three months of the school year, students, faculty and staff gave their time and their resources to raise more than $6,100 that the Wounded Warriors program directed to Paws and Stripes, an organization that trains service dogs and provides counseling to the wounded military veterans the dogs assist.

While these students may not fully comprehend it now, these opportunities to recognize needs and to give make an impact on their lives. Business owner, philanthropist and alum Mary (Goodwin) Jury ’79 tells Connections magazine: “Pius allowed me to look beyond my own stuff as a teenager. It encouraged me to look outside of myself and to be compassionate with others. When one develops that in the teen years it has a very big impact in how we live our lives.”

We’re proud that St. Pius X High School offers our students the opportunities to stretch themselves in academics, faith, creativity, athletics and service. We hope that by taking full advantage of every opportunity, they grow into adults who mark their success by the positive impact they can have on their families, their communities and their world.

Sincerely,

Barbara M. Rothweiler, PhD

Blanket Drive Warms Winter

SPX senior Matt Sluder has made winter warmer for the less fortunate of Albuquerque. Sluder began a blanket drive at St. Pius X High School in October, collecting more than 200 blankets from students and staff and donating them to the Franciscan Friars of the Renewal to distribute to those in need.

“I launched this project because I am striving to serve the Lord through the poor,” Sluder says. “Seeing those who are cold during the winter months moves my heart, so I long to help them.”

With the help of a friend, senior Parker Willis, Sluder organized the drive, announced it to fellow students, collected blankets and delivered them to the friars at the San Juan Diego Friary for use in their ministry to the poor and homeless. The Franciscan Friars of the Renewal opened their Albuquerque friary in October 2011. Their work includes leading youth retreats and parish missions, spending time with jail inmates, and serving a hot meal in a safe place to the poor and homeless once a week.

Creative Writing Student Honored

Senior Jamal Mayhew, co-editor of the “Akira” literary magazine, received the Florence Offermatt Doughty Memorial Award at the school’s Honors Convocation in September. The award is given to an exceptional student in the art of communication.

“Creative writing (class) has helped me develop my writing skills and I’ve gained a lot of confidence in that class,” Mayhew says. “I was completely shocked (to receive the award), but it’s great that they give this honor in the English department. It’s great that they recognize the department and the talent that exists there.”

Francis Doughty established the award in memory of his wife, Florence, to recognize an outstanding student who reflects the ideals that Florence Doughty held dear. She was a master of language, both written and spoken, and she raised her family to respect and embrace communications in all forms.

“As a third year member of the Creative Writing class, Jamal has carried his writing skills from his AP English classes and expanded them,” says Susie Sanchez, English Department chair. “As co-editor (of Akira), he takes his responsibilities far beyond the classroom and works diligently to produce a publication St. Pius is very proud of.”

Mayhew received a financial award towards his current school year tuition as recipient of the award. Although he’s not set on a career yet, he says he will keep writing in his life.

Dancer Earns National Award

“Dance is my passion,” says SPX senior Mariam Mohagheghi. “It’s what I look forward to. It’s what gets me through the day.”

Studying ballet 18 to 20 hours a week led Mohagheghi to a national championship this year at a Phoenix competition in the teen division. Top ten honors at sectional and regional competition paved the way for the championship.

“It’s very challenging,” says Mohagheghi, whose mother danced with the Pennsylvania Ballet and is her ballet teacher. “I’m in school eight hours a day, then four hours of ballet, then homework. It has forced me to learn time management skills. And it’s extremely physically demanding as you deal with your feet always being in pain.”

Dancing since age 2, Mohagheghi doesn’t intend to make dance a professional career.

“I will dance in college, but it’s more a source of joy for me than a career choice,” she says. Mohagheghi plans to study biological sciences and will apply at Georgetown, University of San Diego, Fordham and University of Denver — all of which, she points out, also have excellent fine arts programs.

Fall Golf Qualifies for 2016 State Tourney

The girls golf team came out and in their first tournament won first place at the APS Los Altos tournament. The Sartans went on to produce several more first place wins and qualified to compete at State in May 2016 in Farmington. Team members Ashlee Garrett, Cindy Herrera, and Kori Tellez also qualified for State competition as individuals. On the boys golf team Aidan Thomas, Parker Willis and Elijah Wyckoff shot qualifying scores along with captain Patrick McCarthy, who was the medalist with scores of 73 and 68. The boys finished the season going 5 for 5 in shooting required scores for State.

St. Pius X High School will kick off its year-long 60th Anniversary celebration with a Diamond Jubilee Gala on April 22, 2016, at Hotel Albuquerque.

“This beautiful gala will pay tribute to the 60-year success of our school and our alumni, and celebrate the bright future of our current students and recent grads,” says Becky Montoya, SPX associate advancement director.

“This event is more than just a fundraiser, it is a celebration of a spectacular institution with a distinguished and admired history, in a familiar setting of amity, camaraderie and joy. All while helping secure this tradition and excellence for generations to come.”

This year the Gala is serving two purposes. For this year only, it will take the place of the Annual Mardi Gras Gala fundraiser and will serve to kick-off the yearlong 60th Anniversary Celebration of St. Pius X High School. The event will include a plated dinner, entertainment, silent and live auctions, dancing and much more.

Melissa Stock, owner of MVD Express and SPX parent, says supporting the St. Pius celebration over the past five years through sponsorship has been important to her business.

“Our company doesn’t exist without community support,” Stock says. “So we try to support as many groups as we feel passionate about. The St. Pius event is great exposure for your company. You reach a lot of people in the business community and in general. It comes full circle if you do it right.”

Sponsorship and donation opportunities are available, as well as $100 individual tickets. Through these funds the Gala helps bridge the gap between the school’s tuition and the cost of educating a high school student.

“It is a significant challenge to grow and expand SPX, bring the high caliber of faculty and staff we need and at the same time keep costs in check,” Montoya says. “We welcome anyone who would like to support high-quality, faith-based education to attend the event. You do not have to be a parent, alumni or grandparent to attend the event. The community as a whole is invited.”

SPX is encouraging alumni classes to organize table purchases with people from their class in a competition to see which class has the most spirit in the support of SPX.

The SPX Diamond Jubilee Committee began meeting this fall and continues to seek current parents, past parents, alumni and sponsors to help create a memorable Jubilee celebration. Contact Becky Montoya at (505) 831-8424 or bmontoya@spx.k12.nm.us for more information on how you can help make history in the celebration of SPX’s history.

Friends of St. Pius X enjoy the 2015 Gala and the opportunity to support Catholic education. Be sure to join us in 2016 to launch our 60-year celebration!
Patrick Gallagher '81, chancellor and chief executive officer of the University of Pittsburgh, says he's racing to keep up.

"There's so much happening that's driven by other people," he says. "I'm racing to keep up with a remarkable faculty and student body, and it fills my day with great people with lots of passion."

Selected in 2014 to steer one of the nation's top-rated public universities, Gallagher says his job is to build on the momentum of the past 20 years' effort, which saw the university's work in research and academics impact the transition of the city of Pittsburgh from a steel town to a hub for technology, education, healthcare and financial services.

"The university is playing a unique role in the country and the region," Gallagher says. "We're poised to educate students who have the opportunity to go out and do great things with their lives. And we want to translate our research strengths into applications that make a difference."

The drive to contribute in a way that makes the world a better place got its start when Gallagher joined Amigos de las Americas as a junior at St. Pius X High School. Through four years with the program and summers providing health care and sanitation programs in Mexico, Honduras and Ecuador, his leadership and management skills grew.

"Amigos was a big focal point for me," he says. "The first year I didn't know what I was getting into. It was intense and interesting training, but getting in-country was an eye-opener. It seduced me, and I kept getting deeper into the program."

By his fourth summer he had become project director for all of Ecuador managing about 70 volunteers. Gallagher calls it the beginning of his management career.

Fr. Falbo's chemistry class and his musical production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" also had their influence. "I think everyone who went into the sciences thanks Fr. Falbo for the role he played," he says. "And while there are very formative moments that happen in classrooms, so much of what happens to you is what happens between the classes. That's how you learn to stretch beyond what you're capable of and put yourself in situations that are very enriching. The most memorable moments are the ones that pushed me into new directions or that played a big part of the esprit de corps of being in high school."

Gallagher went on to double major in physics and philosophy at Benedictine College in Atchison, Kan., and earn a PhD in physics from the University of Pittsburgh. He took a job as a research scientist with the National Institute for Standards and Technology (NIST), an agency under the U.S. Department of Commerce.

Over 22 years of public service, Gallagher rose through the ranks to be nominated by President Obama and confirmed by the U.S. Senate in 2009 to serve as the director of NIST. In 2013, he took on the additional role of Acting Deputy Secretary of Commerce, serving as chief operating officer for the department. He served in both capacities until June 2014, when he left for Pitt.

"Over the years I've found that service is the one thing that has guided me through most of my adult life," Gallagher says. "You want to be part of something bigger than yourself and contribute to make the world a better place."

Gallagher says while there are obvious differences between Pitt and the Commerce Department — "Football is a pretty big difference," he says — there are similarities. The two large and complex organizations both have important science-driven components and need leaders to align goals across the institutions, keep key people in the right positions and see the forest for the trees.

Despite the miles, Gallagher still visits family in Albuquerque. "One thing I've realized is that a lot of things change, but a love of New Mexico scenery and green chile stays with you."

He's further reminded of his high school days at Pitt basketball games, where the riotous student section is known as the Oakland Zoo: "I'm reminded of myself in a much smaller gymnasium cheering against Bernalillo."
Extended and flowing. Crisp and angular. Tomas Tafoya ’13 makes his impact through movement.

“Dance really is what describes me,” he says with a wide smile. “It allows me the freedom to express what I can’t say with words — it offers me another language.”

With upcoming lead roles in the Ballet Repertory Theater of New Mexico’s productions of “The Nutcracker” on Dec. 12-24 and “The Little Mermaid” on Feb. 27-March 5, Tafoya will take the opportunity to share his love of dance with a new audience. The two professional opportunities come on the heels of Tafoya’s 2013 run with The Silhouettes, a professional shadow dance company based in Denver, and his 2014 choreography work on and role in “Shrek the Musical” for Musical Theater Southwest in Albuquerque.

Along with professional dance opportunities, Tafoya is pursuing a degree in exercise science at the University of New Mexico with an eye towards becoming a physical therapist for dancers, helping them with injury prevention and rehabilitation.

“I want to keep them from being out and get them back to doing what they love,” he says. “When dance is part of your identity, you can’t live without it.”

Tafoya took his first dance class at Sandra’s School of Dance in Albuquerque at age 6 after growing tired of tagging along to his younger sister’s dance classes. He was competing by age 9. He gave up baseball, basketball and swimming when he started high school to focus on dance.

With national competition success and skills in tap, ballet, jazz, gymnastics, musical theater, contemporary, lyrical and ballroom dancing, Tafoya was ready the summer he graduated from St. Pius X when The Silhouettes asked him to join them for a tour of Ireland. Selected by the company’s director based on his past work with her at his studio, he gained the opportunity to travel to Ireland, Poland, Mexico, Canada and throughout the United States with the company performing in The Silhouettes’ 90 minute show called “Journey of Love,” and at Polacy z Werwa (the Polish Academy Awards), the RE/MAX R4 International Convention and Nick@Nite’s “See Dad Run.” He also has appeared in “The Nutcracker Ballet”, “Romeo and Juliet Ballet”, Disney’s “Lemonade Mouth” and “Sicario.”

Tafoya credits St. Pius X, especially teachers Jennifer Hillsey and William Gater and counselor Deborah Martinez, for contributing to his ability to produce high quality work under the pressures of time. At St. Pius X he also discovered the the importance of the first impressions and beyond: “You hook the audience with the first sentences of an essay or the first 30 seconds of a dance. You bring the audience into your world and in that moment you are part of their lives.”

Mary Jury

“My ‘why’ in life continues to be to contribute to a cause greater than myself.”

For Mary (Goodwin) Jury ’79 giving back is an important part of belonging to any community you want to see survive and thrive, a lesson solidified for her at St. Pius X High School.

“My sense of community was founded there,” she says. “Pius allowed me to look beyond my own stuff as a teenager. It encouraged me to look outside of myself and to be compassionate with others. When one develops that in the teen years it has a very big impact in how we live our lives.”

Jury, owner of the Albuquerque commercial furnishing company Workspace Dynamics, is current president of Commercial Real Estate Women (CREW) New Mexico, an industry networking group; and past board chair and nine-year board member of WESST, a small business development organization. She also currently serves on the Animal Humane Association Board.

She and her husband, Vic Jury, married in 2012 and share a generous view of giving. She has joined in his annual effort to provide for the individual Christmas desires of each homeless child staying at Albuquerque’s Joy Junction during the holidays, delivering the gifts for 40 to 90 kids at midnight on Christmas Eve.

“We have a love for giving and feel it is both a duty and a privilege,” she says. “We have an obligation to give back when we’re blessed. And it’s an honor to have that opportunity.”

After a serious accident five years ago in which she was hit by a car while riding her bicycle and was seriously
Like many people, your house is probably the single largest asset in your estate. It represents a significant investment, something you paid faithfully for over the years. Consequently, it’s only natural that you want to move cautiously in making any decisions about the future of your “Home Sweet Home.” Nevertheless, you are willing to consider some new ideas.

To help you explore some of the options available to you, here are three “house plans” that involve you, your house and your interest in St. Pius X High School

The Live-In Plan

Perhaps you intend to make a major gift to St. Pius X. In fact, you would even give your house if you could. One problem: you’d have no place to live. You could, of course, simply bequeath your home to St. Pius through your will.

Another way is to give your house to St. Pius now, but retain the right to live in it for the rest of your life. This could provide you with a current income tax charitable deduction — something that wouldn’t happen were you to make the transfer through your will. It would also remove the house from your estate which could possibly save estate taxes.

The Charitable Trust Plan

This house plan is great for those who need additional retirement income — and yet who still want to make a gift of their house. Here’s an example of how it might work.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones have a house valued at $250,000. They bought it for $50,000 more than 30 years ago and now own it free and clear. Meeting with St. Pius’s director of advancement, they learn they can divide the deed and put part of the house into a charitable remainder unitrust while retaining the other part to sell for cash to buy a condominium.

They like the idea that the trustee will assume the major role in selling the property, thus relieving the Jones of this hassle. Once sold, the trustee will invest the trust’s share in securities to provide a lifetime flow of income for Mr. and Mrs. Jones.

Additionally, since the trust is a charitable trust, Mr. and Mrs. Jones will obtain an income tax charitable deduction which they can apply against their taxable income.

The Part-Give, Part-Sell Plan

This option is similar to the previous one, except there is no charitable trust involved. The donors divide the deed and give one part to St. Pius. The donors and St. Pius then sell the house, each receiving their share of the proceeds. Because part of the deed goes to a qualified charity, the tax benefits are quite favorable.

As with most gift plans, there are variations to this plan providing an array of possibilities. In fact, the options are nearly endless.

The main point to all of this is to let you know there are various ways to use your house to meet your own needs as well as those of St. Pius. Steve Ross, Advancement Director, will be happy to discuss all of this with you and to provide various illustrations to show you more fully how planned giving and house planning can go hand-in-hand.

You can call Mr. Ross for more information at (505) 831-8423 or you can use the handy coupon below. There is, of course, no charge for his services.
The Sartan Fund is the single largest source of annual support to St. Pius X High School outside of tuition. The Sartan Fund helps provide tuition assistance to 270 students. It also helps with school operations such as capital improvements, athletic projects, faculty continuing education, and fine arts programs.

Last year annual contributions to the Sartan Fund by alumni, parents, grandparents, faculty and staff provided approximately $175,000 in support to St. Pius X. With your help, the Sartan Fund aims to grow each year and continue its mission to provide quality Catholic education through St. Pius X High School.

Tuition assistance is the single greatest need for private funds at St. Pius. The average assistance awarded to a deserving student for the school year is approximately $3,500. Private support also helps the school to maintain an affordable tuition thereby enabling every student who attends to experience the outstanding college-preparatory and faith-formation mission of St. Pius X High School.

We count on you to consider making your gift to this year’s Sartan Fund. You can respond with the enclosed envelope, to a direct appeal that comes your way in the mail, personal contact from the Sartan Fund Committee, or from a call by one of our students during our Phonathon. Again, your support is most crucial and greatly appreciated.

injured, Mary quickly learned what it meant to rely on a community of friends and family.

“I needed other people in a way most people don’t ever experience,” says Jury, who was confined to a wheelchair for eight weeks and still is not cleared to drive. “I have an overwhelming sense of gratitude for the outpouring of love I’ve received.”

Jury says her innate ability to find a lesson, a blessing or a new perspective in a situation was heightened by her traumatic experience. “And my ‘why’ in life continues to be to contribute to a cause greater than myself,” she says.

A track star at Pius — she still holds the record for the long jump and the 100-meter hurdles — Jury earned a track scholarship to the University of Arizona. She ran for two years at U of A, had a son, and then ran two years at the University of New Mexico. She petitioned the NCAA to be allowed a red-shirt year for the time she sat out for her pregnancy. They called it a voluntary injury and denied her petition. She kept running anyway.

Jury, the mother of two adult sons and step-mom to a son and 2 daughters with two grandchildren, started her business 16 years ago. And while furniture can be heavy, she likes to keep the atmosphere light. Her business’s tagline is “Saving the world one ugly space at a time.”

“We like to bring a little humor into what we do,” she says. “We believe people’s space is a reflection of who they are and that it has an impact on their success. We want to inspire success in every space we touch.”

Joe McGuire

“Air traffic controllers were looking at blank screens for the first time in their lives.”

When Joe McGuire ’64 arrived at work in the Federal Aviation Administration’s System Management Office in Albuquerque on Sept. 11, 2001, it was a typical Tuesday. An assistant manager with the office responsible for approximately 11,000 ground-based equipment, facilities, and systems used by air traffic controllers and pilots in New Mexico and West Texas, McGuire was the only manager in the office that day. The other three were out of town for meetings, and he was tasked with conducting the scheduled 6:30 a.m. and 7:30 a.m. conference calls to regional headquarters and to field supervisors.

While on the first conference call from 6:30 to 7:10 a.m., people began arriving to work talking about news reports of a plane crash in New York City.

“Our immediate reaction was that it was a bad accident,” McGuire says. “None of the FAA offices had television feeds or internet that time. Everything we needed to know about came to our office through the U.S. Mail, e-mail, phone or pager.”

McGuire remembered that a secretary in the office kept a small television in her desk to watch on her lunch break. He pulled it out and started watching network news coverage. “I watched in disbelief,” he says. “And I thought, obviously something tragic has happened. We don’t know the cause, but we have to be on alert and make sure our communications are intact.”

He decided to continue with the 7:30 a.m. conference call knowing the crashes in the East were not under his office’s control and that their initial efforts would be best spent making sure the equipment for which they were responsible was operating correctly.

Over the course of a typical Tuesday’s conference calls, between 6:45 a.m. and 8:03 a.m. local time, two commercial airliners had crashed into the World Trade Center’s two towers in Manhattan, another into the Pentagon in Washington, D.C., and a fourth in a field in Stony Creek Township, Pa. A total of 2,977 people were killed in what was later determined to be a terrorist attack against the United States orchestrated by al Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden.

Also during that span of time, at 7:45 a.m., the first unplanned shutdown of U.S. airspace commenced as the FAA ordered more than 4,500 aircraft to land at the nearest airport as soon as practical. While air traffic controllers at the Albuquerque Air Route Traffic Control Center were clearing the skies over the Southwest, McGuire coordinated his staff’s travel to and securing of all long-range, remote radar sites that provide data to the various Air Route Traffic Control Centers they served. They quickly established rotating crews at the typically unstaffed facilities to maintain security of the equipment and the system. By 10:15 a.m. the airspace over the continental U.S. was clear of all commercial and private flights.

“Within four to five hours everything was calm,” McGuire says. “Air traffic controllers were looking at blank screens for the first time in their lives.”

McGuire downplays the importance of his individual impact on 9/11, but acknowledges the role he played in the national response.

“Having come into the system 28 years earlier and getting a varied degree of experience and responsibility, I could take pride looking back that the facilities and systems worked as they should have,” McGuire says. “The equipment performed flawlessly, allowing controllers to take the directive to clear the skies and do what had never been done before or since.”

McGuire’s sees his path to the FAA beginning at St. Pius in now-Monsignor Francis Eggert’s physics club. “As I got through my senior year, I found the humanities came fairly simple for me, but I was attracted to sciences,” he says. “Physics club got me interested.”

McGuire received an appointment to the U.S. Naval Academy where he studied electronics. His U.S. Navy assignments in surface ship weapons and anti-submarine divisions were focused in electronics. Leaving the Navy in 1973, he applied to the Civil Service Commission and landed a job back in Albuquerque with the FAA, again putting his electronics experience to work.

McGuire retired in 2003 from what he calls a remarkable career. “I don’t think I could have made a better choice,” he says. “My career unfolded for me from Pius to the Navy to the FAA. Each stage allowed me to go on to the next.”

He’s using his retirement to pursue his interests, travel, and spend time with his family. McGuire served on the St. Pius X High School Alumni Council from 2006 to 2014 and he keeps current the contact list for the class of 1964, which meets every summer and has a standing monthly lunch date. He has sung with Albuquerque choral groups since 1993. He has also served in the positions of treasurer and secretary of the U.S. Naval Academy Alumni Association, New Mexico Chapter.

In May, 2007, his choir performed at Carnegie Hall in New York City, and he visited the Ground Zero site, a fenced off, raw hole in the ground at that time.

“It was an interesting experience to see what was the footprint of the World Trade Center; I was surprised at how small it was,” he says. “And I remembered the scene of walkers leaving Manhattan on the Brooklyn Bridge. I walked that route and I could see how that was done. Seeing it was eerie.”

“Physics club got me interested.”

Striving to impact community begins well before students graduate from St. Pius X High School. Over the summer and early fall of 2015, SPX students, faculty and staff raised more than $6,100 in support of the Wounded Warriors Career Development Program at Sandia National Laboratories. The Wounded Warriors program directed the funds to Paws and Stripes, an Albuquerque-area organization that provides integrative service dog training and mental health support to veterans and their families.

The funds were presented Nov. 11 during a school Mass honoring military veterans on Veterans Day. They were received by Sean Christopher of the Wounded Warriors Career Development Program at Sandia and Laura Smith of Paws and Stripes.

Smith said a $6,300 scholarship donation to Paws and Stripes covers a complete nine- to 12-month therapeutic training curriculum for a veteran and dog team, which St. Pius X’s donation comes close to covering. Service dog trainers meet with veteran-dog teams weekly, while Paws and Stripes also provides counseling specific to families integrating service animals into the home. Veterans with post-traumatic stress disorder and traumatic brain injury learn to better understand their individual symptoms or triggers and use their service dog as a tool to assist them to better cope. All dogs in the program are adopted from local shelters.

Also attending the Mass from the Wounded Warriors Career Development Program with Christopher were Gabrielle Holcomb and Rob Mitchell, all former U.S. Army sergeants now employed at Sandia. Mitchell explained that the program at Sandia provides employment and educational opportunities to combat disabled veterans. “Many of our peers at Sandia went to college out of high school, while we went to the military,” Mitchell said. The program provides veterans a support structure for two to three years as they transition from military to civilian life and hires five to 10 wounded warriors each year.

SPX Deacon Rene Greivel and Christopher presented the opportunity to support Wounded Warriors to teachers last summer at their faculty and staff retreat.

“Our kids don’t really have a concept of what it means to have served the way these veterans have,” Greivel says. “This gives them a chance to see, meet and talk to them. It may change a few lives.”

Football coach and teacher San Juan Mendoza immediately offered the funds that his team would raise cleaning a vacant lot. Business teacher and DECA advisor Robyn Dow ‘98 offered a list of fundraising projects that other teachers could take on with their classes.

With the support of faculty and staff, funds were raised in many ways. Students organized bake sales and classroom donation buckets. Donations were taken up from fans at football and volleyball games. The Athletic Booster Club and Alumni Council sponsored a Homecoming raffle.

St. Pius X celebrated a Masquerade Homecoming the week of Sept. 21. Homecoming Queen Marisa Trujillo and King Zach Morrison (center) were crowned during coronation, along with (front, from left) 2nd Princess Dominique Rivera, 2nd Prince Jacob Carpenter, 1st Prince Alex Sais and 1st Princess Kulani Gonzales-Stocks. The sophomore class took first prize for their Viva La Carnival float. The SPX Dorados came out to support the Sartans as they beat Gallup’s Miyamura High School 38-15.
Jorja Armijo-Brasher '64 is the recipient of this year’s Outstanding Alumnus Award from St. Pius X High School.

“Jorja Armijo-Brasher has devoted her career to serving others, most recently in her role as the Director of Senior Affairs for the City of Albuquerque,” says Steve Ross, SPX advancement director. “The Outstanding Alumnus recognizes St. Pius grads who have distinguished themselves in their careers and is a fitting tribute to Jorja’s contributions to our community.”

In 1970 Armijo-Brasher stepped in on the ground floor of early childhood education in Albuquerque, helping to start the first public school kindergarten programs in the city. Her 30-year career in early childhood education progressed to teaching teachers best practices and advanced to oversight of APS’s early childhood programs. In 1989 the City of Albuquerque selected Armijo-Brasher to manage a comprehensive child development program grant focused on helping families break the cycle of poverty. In 2000, in what looked like a 180-degree turn, Armijo-Brasher accepted the position of director of the city’s Department of Senior Affairs.

“I looked at it from the perspective that I wasn’t leaving early childhood, I was wrapping my experience around the whole family,” Armijo-Brasher told “Connections” magazine in 2013. “I’ve had the opportunity in my career to develop an awareness of how to honor the growth and development of people throughout the life cycle.”

The Department of Senior Affairs provides activities and opportunities to promote active and healthy aging to those 50 years of age and older. Armijo-Brasher oversees an annual budget in excess of $13 million, 200 employees, and six senior centers, two multi-generational centers, two senior sports and fitness centers and 19 nutrition satellite/meal sites.

“As I look back on my life and career I know that I owe my passion for public service to my parents and my Catholic school upbringing,” Armijo-Brasher says. “I will always be grateful for the high expectations that were set for me at home and by the administration, the teachers and my classmates at St. Pius X. I will always treasure the time spent at St. Pius X in the class of 1964.”

The award will be presented at the SPX Diamond Jubilee Gala on April 22, 2016.
Dalys Receive Vincioni Award

For their generous support of graduating seniors, St. Pius X High School presented the 2015 Julio Vincioni Memorial Award to Linley (Brummell) Daly ’84 and her husband Michael Daly.

“Linley and Mike Daly are wonderful examples of individuals who give of themselves both with their time and their philanthropy,” said Steve Ross, SPX director of advancement. “They are fitting recipients of this year’s Vincioni award whose name honors an individual who gave generously with his time and money in order for his children and others to experience quality Catholic education.”

Eleven years ago the Dalys established the Circle of 7, designed to help a senior who faced leaving St. Pius because of the family’s financial situation. With tuition then at $7,000 a year, each member of the circle contributed $1,000 to support that senior. The anonymous group has now grown beyond seven members and has helped more than 25 deserving students preserve their St. Pius educations.

“The Circle of 7 is about the Sartan community coming together to support St. Pius students in their time of need,” Michael says. “We’re committed to getting them through.”

“As parents of Catholic school students, we recognize that sending kids to Catholic school is difficult for families,” Linley adds. “We want to honor the sacrifices they’ve already made and give them that help, through good times and bad.”

Linley has utilized 25 years of professional for-profit and non-profit experience to found DalyConsulting LLC, which provides non-profit professional consulting. Michael is a senior vice president at Morgan Stanley in Albuquerque. They are proud parents to Lauren ’14, Ryan and Maya.

The Vincioni Award was established by the St. Pius X High School Foundation in 1991 and recognizes exceptional service and significant contributions to the school. It honors Julio Vincioni who gave selflessly of his time and energy to St. Pius for 20 years until his death in 1990. Julio had six children graduate from St. Pius, was a member of the Athletic Booster Club, Pi Dads baseball team and St. Pius X Foundation, and was a co-chairman of the Foundation’s annual fundraiser. He was devoted to the principles and ideals of Catholic education.
